Grape boycotters march on the Main

Students and businessmen alike showed up Saturday morning outside a St. Lawrence Blvd. market to protest the sale of California-grown lettuce and grapes as part of the three-year-old battle between California farm workers' union militant Cezar

Chavez and several producers and growers who are accused of forcing their pickers to live under intolerable conditions for rock-bottom wages. Canadian support of the boycott has grown since Chavez co-militants launched a cross-Canada lecture tour.
