Strike centers on Imperial Valley

other parts of the state, the impact of the strike is not yet over for the Imperial Valley. Growers are facing a drop in yields when seeds are normally sown for the spring crop of cantaloupes, asparagus and other commodities; but there are fears that some of the lost crops will not be replaced, and growers say production will be affected in the future.

In the past, the growers have never been able to stick together; but "we're not going to let them get away with it this time," said Mr. Hurd. "We got the rights to the land, and we're not going to give it up easily.""
